Introduction

Common challenges for Malaysian company secretaries include navigating complex and changing regulations, managing high-volume workloads under time pressure, keeping up with technology, and ensuring compliance with strict filing deadlines to avoid penalties. One of the most challenging aspects of company secretarial practice is non-compliances by directors and shareholders who want quick solutions and short-cuts to doing things. Company secretaries face the challenge of balancing diverse responsibilities, from administrative tasks to providing strategic advice, while managing difficult personalities and ensuring good corporate governance.

Course Objectives

This one-day seminar will be assessing the common non-compliance challenges and issues faced by company secretaries in their practice or work.

Course Outlines

This one-day seminar will look at the following -

- Issuing shares of different classes without ensuring the constitution sets out the rights of each class of shares
- Payment of dividends without ensuring the solvency of the company whilst having accumulated losses which have not been reversed into retained profits
- Allotment of shares by cash consideration or otherwise than for cash and the risk of money laundering
- Acting as a director even though adjudged as a bankrupt or convicted of an offence which disqualify that person to act as a director
- Carrying on fraudulent trading knowing the company is insolvent
- Entering into conflicts of interest situations without proper approval or ratification
- Providing loans or financial assistance or receiving loans or financial assistance which breaches the Money Lenders Act 1951

Learning Outcome

By the end of this seminar, participants will be able to –

- Realise that non-compliance has serious consequences for directors and shareholders
- Deal with the non-compliances by outlining the areas of law which directors and shareholders must know
- Improve their capability in company secretarial practice
- Assist their clients, employers and associates in dealing with the challenging issues and scenarios
